ABSTRACT

The rapid increase of human population is putting an incredible strain on our environment. While developed countries continue to pollute the environment and deplete its resources, developing countries are under increasing pressure to compete economically and their industrial advancements are damaging as well. The demands that this growth places on our global environment are threatening the future of sustainable life on earth. One of the largest environmental effects of human population growth is the problem of global warming. Some scientists fear that global warming will lead to rising sea levels and extreme weather conditions in the future. In order to support the growing population, forests are being destroyed at an alarming rate. Humans also continue to put a great demand on the natural resources of our planet. Many non-renewable resources are being depleted due to the unrestrained use of fuel and energy. Many parts of the world also suffer from a shortage of food and water. The growth of population puts larger demands on our already limited resources. The environment on earth is suffering from the growth of global population. The depletion of resources and biodiversity, the production of waste, and the destroying of natural habitat are serious problems that must be addressed in order to ensure that life on earth will be sustainable throughout the next century.

Introduction

The earth's population in 1800 was 1 billion, having taken all of human history to reach that mark. Only 2 centuries later, the global population is 6 billion, half of which lives in cities. The impact that this population explosion has had on the environment has been just as striking, as seen by changes in greenhouse gas emissions, rates of soil erosion, and the extinction of species. Nature reserves currently comprise about 10% of land area globally, but most are small, disconnected from other reserves, and subject to tremendous human pressures. Population size is clearly an important factor in measuring environmental impact. Other multipliers in this equation are level of affluence—measured as consumption per person and unit of consumption, reflected in the technologies used to supply energy, food, and other resources. The combined effects of population growth, Quantifying the effect of the whip on supply chains, Gages, R. The model we use implies a demand forecast and ordering lead time that is believed to be affecting the whip effect. The discussion also involved the mitigating y of the harmful effects of distortion. The article ends by stimulating the response of the VMI and the chain of custody to a representative selling standard, and the result is similar to the rich performance of frame predictions based on deterministic inputs. P., Randall, T., & Schmidt, G. A supplier's request for twenty units of a manufacturer was followed in order to allow them to take advantage of the discount on bulk purchase, alÅ© m from the stock guarantee for timely shipment to retailers. The aim of this study is to document the strength of the whip effects in the US. M., Lambrecht, M. While the retail sector does not show the effects of the whip, by the explanation you have ³ to observe or not the facilitation of demand, a significant proposal of differences is explained to the extent that the whip is shown by industries. Many factors have been said to co-contribute to the Bullwhip effect in the supply chain; the following are just some of these factors: Supply chain disorganization where larger or smaller quantities of required product are required as a result of the excessive or insufficient performance of the pre-supply chain. pre-provisioning.
